

INTERNATIONAL GCSE HISTORY

Paper 1: International relations depth studies:
conflict and peace in the 20th Century

Specimen

Insert

DO NOT WRITE ANY ANSWERS IN THIS INSERT. YOU MUST ANSWER THE QUESTIONS IN THE ANSWER BOOKLET PROVIDED.

Sources for Peace-making and the League of Nations, c1919-1939 (pages 2-5)

- Source A for use with Questions 1.1, 1.2 and 1.4
- Source B for use with Questions 1.2 and 1.4
- Source C for use with Questions 1.3 and 1.4
- Source D for use with Question 1.4
- Source E for use with Question 1.4

Sources for Crises of the Cold War, 1960-75 (pages 6-9)

- Source F for use with Questions 2.1, 2.2 and 2.4
- Source G for use with Questions 2.2 and 2.4
- Source H for use with Questions 2.3 and 2.4
- Source I for use with Question 2.4
- Source J for use with Question 2.4

Sources for Peace-making and the League of Nations, c1919-1939

Source A

Adapted from a from a speech made by President Woodrow Wilson in September 1919. The speech was one of the last Wilson made as part of a tour around the United States to win support for the League of Nations.

If the nations of the world will accept this great Covenant of the League of Nations and agree to put discussion first and war always last, we have an immense insurance against unspeakable war.

You will say "Is the League an absolute guarantee against war?". No, I do not know of one. But I will tell you this – do you want no insurance at all? Do you want nothing? But with the support of the nations of the world there will be an unstoppable force for peace.

Source B

Adapted from a memo written by an important member of the British government in 1920. He was a key part of the discussions about the setting up of the League of Nations and attended its early meetings.

The chief weapons of the League of Nations are discussion, investigation, mediating an agreed settlement and, finally in the last resort, compulsion. These are powerful weapons. But there are parts of the world where nothing but force is understood, and where even force is useless unless it is quickly used.

For example, in some countries opinion is likely to be against minorities and where civilised opinion is not understood. Outrages against these minorities are usually inflicted by armed bands over whom governments would immediately claim they had no control. The League of Nations with no force at its disposal would have no weapon except protest, which usually has little success.

It is suggested that the League of Nations should run mandates. Without resources, there is a serious danger that the League would collapse under the strain. I continue to believe and hope that the League can serve the goal of peace well, but if overloaded it will assuredly break.

It would seem that in parts of the world the League can only be effective if there is a Great Power with the authority through which the League can act. If no such Great Power can be found to support it, the League cannot work effectively.

Source C

A cartoon published in the popular British magazine 'Punch' in 1919.

Punch was known for highlighting serious issues of the time in a humorous way.

THE GAP IN THE BRIDGE.

Source D

A cartoon by David Low published in a popular British newspaper in January 1933.

THE DOORMAT.

Source E

An account of the Abyssinian crisis and the League of Nations.

Adapted from a book by Ruth Henig called 'The League of Nations', published in 2010.

Italy continued attacking Abyssinia, hardly troubled by the League's mild economic sanctions and captured the capital, Addis Ababa. It was clear that the League's efforts to stop the Italian invasion of Abyssinia had failed, and on 6th May, Eden admitted in the House of Commons that sanctions had failed. Abyssinia had become part of Italy's Empire, and Italy left the League the following year.

Arguments between Britain and France had undermined the effectiveness of the League in the 1920s during the Corfu dispute. The failure to agree on a way to deal with Mussolini and Hitler had robbed the League of any chance of using collective action. In the Spanish Civil War, Mussolini worked closely with Hitler, helping General Franco defeat his Republican opponents.

The League was weakened, with only France, Britain and Soviet Russia trying to counteract growing aggression from Germany, Italy and Japan, with the United States determined to stand aside.

After the failure to protect Abyssinia trust in the League was completely destroyed and collective security was replaced by old diplomacy, agreements made privately between the powers. This led to the Munich Agreement of 1938 – European countries were about to disappear just as Abyssinia had done. Before long, war broke out again in Europe when German troops invaded Poland in 1939.

One last act remained for the League to perform. Stalin had concluded a pact with Hitler in 1939, and three months later Soviet troops invaded Finland in an act of unprovoked aggression. The Council of the League was quickly called to meet and decided to expel the Soviet Union, ensuring the League would not survive beyond the Second World War.

Sources for Crises of the Cold War, 1960-1975

Source F

Adapted from a book by Nikita Khrushchev, 'Khrushchev Remembers', 1970

After the Cuban Missile Crisis, Khrushchev was replaced as leader of the USSR.

Source F is not reproduced here due to third-party copyright restrictions

We're sorry that Source F is not available to download right now. This source has been redacted pending copyright approval.

In the Source, Khrushchev describes how the Soviet Union sent aid to Cuba to support its government and challenge the U.S. He describes the Cuban crisis was seen as a Soviet victory, showing strength and gaining propaganda value by making the U.S. retreat

Source G

Adapted from 'Thirteen Days – A Memoir of the Cuban Missile Crisis', written by Robert Kennedy in 1969.

Robert Kennedy was President Kennedy's brother and present in the White House throughout the crisis.

Source G is not reproduced here due to third-party copyright restrictions

We're sorry that Source G is not available to download right now. This source has been redacted pending copyright approval.

In the Source, Robert Kennedy describes how after the crisis, President Kennedy didn't claim victory. He warned future leaders to be cautious of military advice and praised Khrushchev for choosing peace. He was most saddened by the loss of young lives and saw the outcome as a win for future generations, not for politics.

Source H

A cartoon published in a widely read American newspaper, 1st November 1962

The figures represent Kennedy and Khrushchev. Kennedy is saying to Khrushchev, 'Let's get a lock for this thing'.

Source I

A cartoon published in a popular American newspaper on 29th October 1962

Khrushchev is the figure on the right.

Source I is not reproduced here due to third-party copyright restrictions

We're sorry that Source I is not available to download right now. This source has been redacted pending copyright approval. The title of the cartoon is 'Backdown at Castro Gulch' by the artist Karl Hubenthal.

The Source is a cartoon that shows a showdown, like in an old Western film. The big U.S. figure stands firm while the smaller, nervous figure on the right - representing Khrushchev - backs down and drops his weapon.

Source J

An account of the reasons for Khrushchev's decision to end the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962.

Adapted from 'Red Heat – Conspiracy, murder and the Cold War in the Caribbean', by Alex von Tunzelmann, published in 2010.

Source J is not reproduced here due to third-party copyright restrictions

We're sorry that Source J is not available to download right now. This source has been redacted pending copyright approval.

In the Source, von Tunzelmann describes how Castro feared a U.S. invasion and urged a nuclear strike if attacked. Castro wrote a letter to Khrushchev, who misunderstood it as a call to nuke the U.S. right away. This made Khrushchev realize the danger and led to the missile withdrawal. Though Kennedy looked calm, Castro's warning pushed the Soviets to act.

END OF SOURCES

Permission to reproduce all copyright material has been applied for. In some cases, efforts to contact copyright-holders may have been unsuccessful and OxfordAQA International Qualifications will be happy to rectify any omissions of acknowledgements. If you have any queries please contact the Copyright Team, AQA, Stag Hill House, Guildford, GU2 7XJ.