Cold Knap Lake

We once watched a crowd pull a drowned child from the lake.
Blue lipped and dressed in water's long green silk she lay for dead.

Then kneeling on the earth,
a heroine, her red head bowed,
her wartime cotton frock soaked,
my mother gave a stranger's child her breath.
The crowd stood silent, drawn by the dread of it.

The child breathed, bleating and rosy in my mother's hands.
My father took her home to a poor house and watched her thrashed for almost drowning.

Was I there?
Or is that troubled surface something else shadowy under the dipped fingers of willows where satiny mud blooms in cloudiness after the treading, heavy webs of swans as their wings beat and whistle on the air?

All lost things lie under closing water in that lake with the poor man's daughter.

Section B: Unseen poetryAnswer Question 3.*0 3

Read the poem below and answer the question that follows.

Evans

Evans? Yes, many a time
I came down his bare flight
Of stairs into the gaunt kitchen
With its wood fire, where crickets sang Accompaniment to the black kettle's
Whine, and so into the cold
Dark to smother in the thick tide
Of night that drifted about the walls
Of his stark farm on the hill ridge.

It was not the dark filling my eyes
And mouth appalled me; not even the drip
Of rain like blood from the one tree
Weather-tortured. It was the dark Silting the veins of that sick man
I left stranded upon the vast And lonely shore of his bleak bed.

In this passage from The Adventure of the Speckled Band by Arthur Conan Doyle, Helen Stoner is describing to Sherlock Holmes the night of her sister's death.

Read the passage below and then answer the question that follows.

The wind was howling outside, and the rain was beating and splashing against the windows. Suddenly, amidst all the hubbub of the gale, there burst forth the wild scream of a terrified woman. I knew that it was my sister's voice. I sprang from my bed, wrapped a shawl round me, and rushed into the corridor. As I opened my door I seemed to hear a low whistle, such as my sister described, and a few moments later a clanging sound, as if a mass of metal had fallen. As I ran down the passage my sister's door was unlocked, and revolved slowly upon its hinges. I stared at it horror-stricken, not knowing what was about to issue from it. By the light of the corridor lamp I saw my sister appear at the opening, her face blanched with terror, her hands groping for help, her whole figure swaying to and fro like that of a drunkard. I ran to her and threw my arms round her, but at that moment her knees seemed to give way and she fell to the ground. She writhed as one who is in terrible pain, and her limbs were dreadfully convulsed. At first I thought that she had not recognized me, but as I bent over her she suddenly shrieked out in a voice which I shall never forget, "Oh, my God! Helen! It was the band! The speckled band!" There was something else which she would fain have said, and she stabbed with her finger into the air in the direction of the Doctor's room, but a fresh convulsion seized her and choked her words.

Describe the atmosphere that Conan Doyle creates in this extract. How does he create this atmosphere by the ways that he writes?
